Young professionals group flexes entrepreneurial muscles

Organization revitalized in 2007 after initial effort in 2004

By JEREMY JOHNSON

Staff writer

Shana Smith (from left), Emily Gill and Trent Moulin, members of the Future Leaders and Entrepreneur Exchange (FLEX) are working to provide valuable business networking and contact resources and broadening young professionals' roles in the community.

By Jerry Sowden

For the local young professionals group, Future Leaders and Entrepreneur Exchange (FLEX), there is no time like the present to start preparing for the future.

FLEX is a group born of the Venango County Young Professionals Network, founded regionally in 2004. The original group was one of 11 in the state and a subsidiary of the larger Pennsylvania Young Professionals organization. The PYP was the first statewide young professional group in the nation, according to FLEX member Emily Gill.

As progressive an effort as it may have seemed, the original program failed to gain interest and take off like some members hoped. However, it reconvened in 2007 after attracting increased support and more invested interest from local young professionals.

"That's when we started getting together more regularly, we nailed down some structure, elected officers and went through our mission statement to see what we really wanted out of this group," said Trent Moulin, the FLEX president and director of fund development for the Allegheny Region chapter of the Red Cross. "We asked ourselves what we wanted to see in the future, economically, socially and environmentally, and what we had to do to effect change."

Under the auspices of the Venango Area Chamber of Commerce, FLEX has found more solid footing than its PYP predecessor, and the group has been able to use the chamber as a launching point for further developing the program and increasing visibility in the business community.

"It's a natural fit," said Ashley McCauley, office administrator at the chamber office in Oil City. "The chamber board is really encouraged by their enthusiasm and efforts in the community."

Gill said the chamber board (which has four thirty-something professionals of its own) voted unanimously to include FLEX as a component of the chamber's services.

"I think a lot of the chamber's goals align very well with ours ... as far as networking capabilities and professional development and what we're trying to do, both in our professional lives and our social networking lives, too," Moulin said.

Shana Smith, the FLEX chair of membership and civic engagement, said the organization's goals are to "create a professional atmosphere for young professionals so they can develop and grow into leadership roles in the community."

So, aside from providing valuable business networking and contact resources, FLEX is also broadening its focus to include young professionals' civic roles in the community. FLEX leaders would do so by using their networking resources and acting as a liaison between individual professionals and prospective board and service organizations.

Furthermore, FLEX would serve to educate young professionals on the basics of being a board member, from Robert's Rules of Order and Parliamentary procedure to how board meetings are run on a general basis. By doing so, FLEX members hope to add substance to organizational youth movements, as opposed to paying lip service by merely appointing younger board members who do not fully understand and appreciate their responsibilities.

"We didn't want to be brought onto boards just because we're token 'young people,'" Gill said. "We want to actually see how we can fit on those boards and committees, how we can have sustainable focus, and how we can make a difference."

It's a concept that Moulin said boils down to "equipping and connecting. We equip people to serve on boards, and then make sure to connect people with the right boards."

Many of FLEX's 25-plus members serve on a number of local boards and organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce, the Oil Region Alliance, the Main Street program, the Take Pride in Oil City program and the Venango County Planning Commission.

The group has members and representatives from Oil City, Franklin, Titusville, Emlenton, Cochranon and more, and meets regularly with other young professional groups from throughout the region and state.

"Soon that leadership baton is going to be passed and I think the more equipped we are in any capacity, the better off the community at large is going to be," Moulin said. "I see FLEX as a component in inspiring civic engagement."

For FLEX, those civic engagements also include fundraisers, mixers, meetings, luncheons and the Ultimate Frisbee tournament, held during the city's Oil Heritage celebrations. The group is also in the process of starting a canned food drive to support the needy in the area.

"We're definitely movers and shakers," Smith said.

FLEX meets every third Monday of the month and will be meeting next week at the Chamber of Commerce to discuss the group's current agenda. Although the group is designated for young professionals, membership is not ageexclusive and is free to anyone interested in developing stronger business networks.

"If you call yourself a FLEX-er, you are a FLEXer," Moulin said. "It's just about coming to the meetings, having fun, getting your hands dirty and making valuable contacts."
